

This an every word index to the endnotes (pages 443–495) of McKee Rankin and the Heyday of the American Theater. I erased all pronouns, definite articles, general terms such as actors, months of the year and inconsequential terms. By having so many words indexed we should find events and names more easily. For instance, I wished to locate a reference to actor-managers having to pay towns for permission to act, called “extending courtesies”, which if not paid would bring a higher fee for a licence. Under “licence” I found p.457 which led me to the item [note 64]. “Courtesies” would also lead me there, although I was more likely to remember “licence”. A scholar asked me about Richard Davidge’s connection with Rankin’s company. I had cut from the manuscript a references to Davidge joining in a benefit for his son playing in Rankin’s company in Philadelphia. Davidge had also played at one time in Rankin’s company. I should have put it in the notes. But there is one reference to Richard Davidge in the notes, p.455 [note 26] One mistake I made in the notes was to name Frank Faye rather than Eddie Foy as the hero in the Iroquois Theatre fire [which I intended to check because I thought it probably was Foy but forgot—it was caught by a critic, which was amazing amidst the density of the notes]. “Iroquois” notes the page as 484; it is note 238. For plays, of which I give the plots in the notes and Rankin’s roles and interpretations, check one word in the title and you should find it—for instance “Love, or The Countess and the Serf” may be found under “Love”, p.450, “Countess” p.450, and “Serf” p.450. “Love” and “Countess” refer to other pages and the titles of other plays. It is best to choose the least common word such as “Serf” which notes only page 450.
